IZAKAYA OYAZI PROVIDES JAPANESE NIGHTLIFE AND 'TONGUE-HAPPY' TRADITIONAL FOODS

BY VANESSA SALVIA

If Eugene were Japan, there would be an izakaya on every corner — maybe several.

Most of them would be street stalls specializing in only one type of food, such as fish soup. Some, like the newly opened Izakaya Oyazi in the space of the former Granary Pizza restaurant, would have a broad menu.

“An izakaya is for casual comfort food where people go after work for bonding and talking,” owner Preston Shin says. “Business people go to not talk about work, for personal bonding. Each [izakaya] usually has a specialty, but we’re more of a ‘serves it all.’”

Sonny Moon, his wife, says, “It’s the food you would eat at home.”

Shin sees no competition between Izakaya Oyazi and the other izakaya in town, Meiji. “We coexist,” he says. “We knew that Eugene needed another place for Asian nightlife and good food and drink and atmosphere.”

Izakaya Oyazi had a soft opening April 19 and a grand opening July 14. The couple gathered feedback from customers and made some adjustments to their original menu. For instance, Moon says, customers seemed to want more of a fine dining experience for dinner, so they’ve expanded the menu and adjusted how they plated some food.

Moon says that serving skewers such as yakitori chicken skewers on a bed of cabbage is typical in Japan, but in Eugene, it came across as plain. “People didn’t like it,” she says. “So now we have a green salad with herbs.”

While Izakaya Meiji is focused on whiskeys, Izakaya Oyazi is rooted in sake. Shin says they offer the largest selection of sake in the Northwest, with servers who are trained to help customers make a good selection. “There’s so much variety in sake,” he says. “It’s like with wine. It’s like eating meat but not ever trying seafood. You’re leaving out a whole class of things.”

In addition to the rarer sakes, Izakaya Oyazi serves Oni Koroshi, an inexpensive sake Moon says is “the draft beer of sake.” She also stocks unpasteurized Namasake, which must be drunk quickly in order to maintain its freshness. “We go through it,” she says, and customers can ask for a sample.

Moon and Shin say their establishment is already popular with the many Asian students in town. Once dinner wraps up upstairs, most of the action moves downstairs for a feel that is more about nightlife than table service. The decor was all brought in from Japan and is vintage from the 1980s.

“We wanted to bring in the things that would be familiar for people from Japan,” Moon says. “These are all fun things. We want you to be happy, and not just tongue-happy.”

But tongue-happy you will definitely be. The Osaka-born chef makes his own house sauce for the pork katsu, a hand-breaded and lightly fried cutlet, and gives his broth and curries rich, deep flavor from kombu, a type of seaweed rich in umami, and flakes of dried bonito, a fish. “No MSG,” Shin says.

The plates come out beautifully arranged, served with chopsticks. The menu centers around larger dinner entrees served in bento boxes and small sharable plates such as steamed soybeans and octopus salad.

The bento boxes, which cost from $19 for tofu to $27 for grilled eel, hold a large portion of food, including green salad, soup, three dumplings and three pieces of takoyaki, a snack similar to a savory griddle cake.

In addition to the varied menu, the second half of Izakaya Oyazi’s name sets it apart.

“The original word would be ‘oyaji,’ with a j,” Shin says. “That means something like ‘old man,’ or ‘uncle.’ Using the ‘z’ is like spelling crossing with an ‘x.’ It means we’re different. Some people think it’s a mistake.”

Not so. “We did that on purpose,” Moon says. “The new name makes it unique to Eugene. Izakaya is all about creation. It’s telling people we’re different.”

Find Izakaya Oyazi at 259 E. 5th Avenue. It’s open 5 pm to midnight Monday through Saturday. For more info, call (458) 201-7433.

ALL THAT JAZZ

TWO WOMEN LIVE THEIR RESTAURANT DREAMS AT JAZZY LADIES CAFÉ AND COFFEEHOUSE BY VANESSA SALVIA

“It’s good but not as good as Michelle’s,” is something Carmen Nasholm heard often as her seven kids were growing up. Michelle Reid, Michelle’s husband Dave and their two children became friends with the Nasholms through church in 1993.

“We always talked about how great it would be if I could have a place that sold jazz CDs and books and Michelle could have a lunch counter,” Nasholm says. In September 2015, once all but two of Nasholm’s kids had flown the nest, that dream became a reality with four tables plus a handful of stools in downtown Eugene. And, of course, a soundtrack of Nasholm’s preferred Dixieland jazz (most of the time).

Michelle Reid says she’s been told all her life that she should open a restaurant.

Her husband, Dave Reid, concurs. “I told her she should,” he says. “I love reading our Yelp reviews where someone says they just had the best biscuits and gravy in their life, and I’m like, ‘Yep, I’ve known that for 20 years!’”

In the middle of a busy weekday lunch, customer Lou Lynner came in craving a turkey and cranberry sandwich. Lynner hadn’t been in for a few weeks, and after giving both ladies a hug and catching up, Michelle Reid tells him she can’t make the sandwich because she can’t get fresh cranberries. Next year, she tells him, she’ll plan ahead and freeze more.

Lynner chooses smoked chicken tacos instead, and says he’s been coming in since Jazzy Ladies Café and Coffeehouse opened. “The food is very fresh, it’s friendly, quaint, cozy and has a good feeling to it,” he says. “It’s very personal.”

Reid admits that she sometimes starts to tear up when she’s making dough for the from-scratch cinnamon rolls. “It’s my grandmother’s recipe,” she says. “I remember her telling me that I would learn to feel when the dough is ready, and when I feel that, it’s very sweet to me.”

The kitchen smokes its own meats, including 50 pounds of bacon every two weeks and pastrami on alternating weeks. The menu revolves around what’s available from the local farmers market right outside the door and the smoker, which could be chicken, ham, brisket or pork.

Their proteins come from Long’s Meat Market, dairy is from Lochmead, eggs are free-range and staples come from Hummingbird Wholesale. Reid grinds wheat berries on-site for fresh wheat bread from wheat grown by Camas Country Mills in Junction City.

They also have gluten-free options for many of their menu items — and many are naturally gluten-free. Reid, who is gluten-sensitive herself, says her goal is that her customers can’t tell the difference.

Other than years of good, from-scratch home cooking, neither woman has a restaurant background. “We can break the rules,” Nasholm says. “We don’t have any expectations to follow of what a restaurant is supposed to do, so we just do what’s good.”

Jazzy Ladies Café and Coffeehouse is at 45 E. 8th Avenue (Membrillo’s old location), open 8 am to 3 pm Monday through Friday and 9 am to 3 pm Saturday. See jazzyladiescafe.com for more information.

PRETZELS WITH A TWIST

REALITY KITCHEN'S DOUGHY TREAT CART ROLLS INTO THE BUS STATION BY AMY KLARUP

"I can ramble," Jim Evangelista warns me with a twinkle in his eye as we sit down in his bakery off River Road. "And I've got lots to talk about."

Evangelista does have lots to talk about — mostly words of praise for all the people, organizations and institutions that came together to make the nonprofit Eugene bakery Reality Kitchen and its brand-new pretzel food cart a rollicking success.

On Aug. 18, Lane Transit District finalized an agreement with Evangelista to place Reality Kitchen's Pinocchio-inspired food cart at the LTD bus station in downtown Eugene.

"It's a remarkable opportunity," Evangelista says.

Evangelista is something of a jolly gnome, wearing overalls and a ready smile. He and Catherine Pickup, his wife, founded Reality Kitchen with the goal of creating a space for young adults with developmental or intellectual disabilities to pick up job skills and gain experience.

According to the Oregon Council on Developmental Disabilities, "the vast majority of Oregonians with developmental disabilities are underemployed or unemployed despite their demonstrated ability to become valued employees."

Places like Reality Kitchen provide an environment where intellectually disabled workers interact with neurotypical workers and practice being in a community workplace, meeting with customers and taking part in every step of production, from baking to delivery.

Evangelista and Pickup have worked out of their bakery off River Road since 2013, and while Evangelista is happy to talk about Reality Kitchen's history, he's especially eager to shine the spotlight on his newest project, the Pretzel Wagon.

"I know that it will stick in people's minds," Evangelista says, and it's hard to disagree with him. Hand-painted by Evangelista and Pickup, the cart radiates charisma with its teal-painted wooden paneling, bright red trim and lemon yellow detailing.

Evangelista modeled the cart on the villainous Stromboli's puppet wagon from Pinocchio, complete with antique-looking decorations and old-fashioned door hinges. The design evokes the theatrical flair of a set piece — not surprising, considering Evangelista's background in mural painting and theater.

He says he and Pickup credit friend and neighbor Barbara Morseth, who passed away in 2013, with the cart's creative vibe.

"She was in the theater and was old-school Eugene," Evangelista says of Morseth. "We were talking with Barbara one day trying to come up with a design, and she said, 'Well, it's gotta be colorful! It's gotta be imaginative!'"

Evangelista says Morseth encouraged the couple as they spent time on the cart, helping to paint it or reading to the couple as they worked.

Reality Kitchen received a grant from the R.W. Family Fund of the Oregon Community Foundation to pay for initial construction costs, and before they knew it, what started as a stripped-down boat trailer had turned into a mobile pretzel-dispensing unit — except for the inside.

"It got to a point where I couldn't do the finishing details, the interior work, some of the things that would make it up to code," Evangelista says. "It was languishing, and I was really frustrated because I wanted to get this thing done."

That's when McKenzie Commercial, the contractor working on Eugene City Hall, entered the project after Evangelista reached out for advice.

"The cart looked really nice," says Todd Glenz, principal owner of McKenzie Commercial, "but it needed some interior finishing, so we got some help from the local contractors that we generally work with and basically took what he had built and made it work."

A number of local building companies collaborated to work on the cart, including the Eugene Builders Exchange, McKenzie Glass, Tom's Plumbing, Reynolds Electric and more.

Together, they installed a new roof and flooring, added plumbing, recoated the interior with plastic panels, added a window and hinges to one of the doors and fixed the hot water heater.

"We were so grateful for that opportunity and for the work that they did," Evangelista says. "It's all contribution. I can't thank them enough."

Evangelista says he knew he wanted to place the cart in a highly visible spot — both the University of Oregon campus and Kesey Square were under consideration.

But when the opportunity for a partnership with LTD came up, Evangelista knew it was the right choice.

"The whole idea is to use this as an alternate setting so that it's this imaginative, creative unit that goes out in the community and creates this other setting that folks in our program get to utilize and work on," Evangelista says.

"The public gets to understand and see what they are capable of," he continues. "It's about changing perceptions of the community around what the employment options are for people who experience intellectual and development disabilities. To do that in a way that is meaningful and gives them employment skills — that's the whole point."

Evangelista says his staff is excited and looking forward to trying out the cart, which will sell Reality Kitchen's signature Bavarian-style pretzels. Chewy, doughy and perfectly salted, the pretzels are satisfyingly savory and more delicious than any pretzel has a right to be.

The Pretzel Wagon will also sell soups, scones, pastries and drinks, and Evangelista plans to rotate the menu based on the season — look out for cinnamon apple, bacon-filled and chocolate pretzels.

"It will be the perfect spot," Evangelista says with a smile.

The Pretzel Wagon is located at the LTD bus station. For more information, keep up with Reality Kitchen on Facebook.

JOY IN THE WHITEAKER

BRAILS WILL BRING ITS 'BEST HANGOVER' BREAKFASTS TO NEW SPOT ON 5TH AVENUE BY RICK LEVIN

Joy Knudtson is a force of nature. As owner and operator of Brails Restaurant in south Eugene, Sang Joo (aka Joy) Knudtson provides a big measure of the joint's appeal. On any given morning you can find her zipping around the linoleum floor of this old-fashioned American diner with the antic patterns of a human hurricane — part field marshal, part peppy maestro, all cult of personality. Her demeanor is flashy, welcoming and entertainingly out-loud, like a low-impact carnival barker, and the perpetual activity to which she subjects her environment belies a sly watchfulness that comes from running a busy café for the past 18 years.

"Honey, I'll be right with you," Knudtson tells me as she floats out the swinging front door, only to appear five minutes later from the opposite direction at the back of the restaurant. I wonder if she's finally split herself in two.

Such doubling seems almost feasible for an overflowing personality and, indeed, it might serve Knudtson well these days: She'll soon be opening a second Brails on 5th Avenue on the outskirts of the Whiteaker neighborhood at the spot of the former Keystone Café, which recently closed its doors after 40 years in business.

As with Knudtson herself, Brails is something of an institution in Eugene. A classic American-style greasy spoon in the Edward Hopper mold, the place has taken the prize for "best hangover breakfast" in EW's Best of Eugene reader's poll 12 years running. During the breakfast rush, waiters scurry heaping plates of eggs, bacon and perfectly crisped hashbrowns to patrons ranging from college kids, old-timers and members of Eugene's tattooed glitterati.

Sitting down over coffee, Knudtson fills me in on the new enterprise. She says that she really had no interest in opening a second restaurant, but then her daughter graduated high school and she had an empty nest. "I thought, 'I gotta be busier.'" The old Keystone location went on the market, and she got a wild hair.

"I wasn't really planning to do anything, but I got interested," she says, smiling. "I think this was meant to be."

The interior of Brails on 5th will be similar to the original, Knudtson says, but the new place will feature outdoor seating as well. Fans of Brails can rest assured that the menu will be the same, though she says she's introducing buckwheat pancakes to the mix, as well as veggie biscuits and gravy. The addition of espresso and cinnamon rolls will give the place the feel of a café.

"I'm pretty excited about it and I want to make people happy over there, for the Whiteaker people," she says. "I'm going to try my best to make it cozy. You can hang out over there, drink coffee and whatever it is."

The city permitting process delayed the planned opening in mid-September. I ask Knudtson about the new opening date. She contemplates the ceiling for a moment. "I'm shooting for, let's say, Oct. 1," she says suddenly, gazing at me with a bit of a mad-scientist gleam. I get the distinct feeling I've just been made privy to breaking news.

Then inspiration truly seems to strike. "Opening day, I'm going to serve biscuits and gravy, free!" she says, setting both hands on the table. "Cinnamon rolls, free!"

I scramble to get it all down. We both laugh a bit. "I feed people pretty good," Knudtson says, winking at me. "That's my quality. I'm not stingy — let's say that. I don't have a whole bunch of money, but I'm not cheap."

Brails in south Eugene is open weekdays, 7 am to 2 pm, weekends 7 am to 3 pm at 1689 Willamette Street. The new Brails (tentatively opening Oct. 1) is located at the former Keystone Café, 395 W. 5th Avenue.

JOSEPH AND NATALIE SHEILD
OF PIG & TURNIP

SCHNITZEL WITH FRIES

SCHNITZEL IN SPRINGFIELD

PIG & TURNIP BRINGS GERMAN-INSPIRED CUISINE TO SPROUT! MARKETPLACE BY KIANNA CABUCO

It's a familiar story: Pig & Turnip started out as a food stand in Eugene but with a stationary location that wasn't easily accessible. Owner and chef Natalie Sheild decided it was time for a change. The German-inspired cuisine moved in February to its new location at Springfield's Sprout! Regional Food Hub.

Sprout! is an incubator program that helps local small businesses grow. Pig & Turnip, along with a handful of other restaurants, is nestled in the Sprout! building. You'll find it just past the courtyard of A Street and through large, heavy-set doors. As soon as you walk in, a barrage of different aromas fills the air.

With traditional options like bratwurst, schnitzel and reubens, the cooks at Pig & Turnip are always open to talking about their specials.

Owner Natalie Sheild is a self-trained chef with experience gained in kitchens that gave her a lot of leniency and on-the-job training, she says. She took German in college and visited the country shortly after graduating. "It was the closest I ever felt to being in Eugene," Sheild says, "which is the home of my heart."

"I will always have that memory of eating a bratwurst over a bed of kraut in a castle," she adds.

Sheild says she went about everything a little backward when it came to starting her business. "We found a food cart," she says, "and I was like, 'Oh my gosh. That's the kitchen I want.' And then, we bought it and thought, What are we going to do with it?" That essentially brought about the idea for Pig & Turnip.

"I realized there weren't a lot of places to get really good, locally sourced meats," Sheild says, "and what better food to do than German?"

The restaurant used to get its meats and sausages from a vendor but now makes all of its sausages in-house after it dawned upon Sheild one day, "I'm a chef. I want to be doing this myself," she says. "I want to be breaking things down in-house. I want to be tenderizing my own pork loin for our schnitzel."

The sausages are now made in-house, and Sheild says the brisket is next on the list.

"All of our stuff comes from somebody in town," Sheild states. That's where the restaurant gets a bit of its Northwest touch. Whether through produce, the beef used for burgers or bread for buns, Sheild says almost everything they use in their food is locally sourced.

One menu item that has a Northwest feel to it, according to Sheild, is the Karteburger. It's made with 100-percent grass-fed beef topped with fondue and braised onions on a brioche bun made by Reality Kitchen in Eugene.

One bite into the Karteburger and the bun crackles beautifully. The burger is perfectly juicy and packed with fresh vegetables, and it pairs well with the restaurant's colorful bratwurst topped with a delicious yet not overpowering mustard aioli.

"We have lots of veggie options as well," Sheild states, "because it's called Pig and Turnip." She adds, "During the winter, we have this amazing turnip soup that we serve." Sheild notes that they also run a lot of specials such as a wild mushroom penne and locally sourced green salad, as well as tomato basil soup and German grilled cheese.

"Eventually, we'd like to expand and have beers on tap," Sheild states. "Our hope is to get into a pub-like restaurant here in Springfield and one in Eugene."

And a special note to the gluten-free crowd: "Everything we do is gluten-free friendly," Sheild says. "Everything is or can be made gluten-free. I have celiac, so I wanted to be able to eat at my own restaurant."

Pig & Turnip is at 418 A Street in Springfield, and it's open 11 am to 9 pm Tuesday through Saturday. See pigandturnip.com for more.

GLAZED & CONFUSED

BY BEN RICKER

Food journalists at respected culinary magazines venture that doughnuts are “having a moment” right now. Frenchified boutique pastries made with cage- and hormone-free ingredients at places like Blue Star — first in Portland then L.A. and Tokyo — masquerade as doughnuts and telegraph the coming of a revolution similar to the obnoxious cupcake uprising of yesteryear.

Feeling doughnuts slip away from the ordinary and into the purview of wealthy cosmopolitan foodies irks me because I know they are not meant for the haut monde. Dirt cheap and made from the worst stuff on earth, the glazed annulus fits neatly into my schlubby fist — the powerless fist of a futureless bum. Doughnuts are loser food. Knots of sugar and grease form perfect ballast for the all-night diner set, the “Nighthawks” Edward Hopper painted, folks with no place else to go.

Initially, the plan was to hit every doughnut counter and rank the city’s doughnut scene top to bottom using a quasi-scientific method. In recent weeks I’ve spoken with hardened doughnut shop clerks and self-proclaimed doughnut experts as I threw myself into a sickening city-wide junk food bender. In all, the most authentic wisdom came to me from a dour 3-year-old with whom I shared a Bismarck from Bob’s Donuts.

“I just like doughnuts,” the boy said. “I just like to eat them. That’s it.” He then asked me to bug off.

However impolite, the kid was onto something: Don’t overthink it. Doughnuts are not special; they say nothing about the broader world in which they exist. And most everywhere, doughnuts are all the same.

I realized Eugene’s doughnut shops aren’t really about doughnuts anyway.

Take Dizzy Dean’s Donuts, located in a windswept strip mall on West 11th. The doughnuts aren’t very good, but it’s easier there than anyplace else to gaze into the middle distance and think about nothing. Time stands perfectly still at Dean’s. Modern articles, like smartphones and cans of energy soda, adopt a futuristic and untrustworthy sheen the longer you stare into the glazed hole of a neon orange cake doughnut.

The only item scribbled in my notebook that day reads: “This pink frosted cruller looks too much like a bleached anus.”

At Bob’s Donuts, hunkered in a small lunar strip mall on Chambers, you meet the Bob. When asked how he’s doing, Bob’s says, “Wishin’ I was fishin’.” Wild tangles of rods and tackle piled by the counter corroborate.

As far as doughnuts go, Bob’s deserve recognition. But what I dig most about Bob’s is Bob — a warm, if weary, doughnut man who seems at times a hostage in his own shop. With a glazed buttermilk bar and mug of coffee in your hands, the air becomes easy to breathe. The world outside, run entirely for profit by billionaire swine at your expense, retreats almost entirely away.

It’s also a great place to buy a razor-sharp hunting knife. Ask Bob about the pile of glistening steel blades that shine from inside the glass case at the register.

Daynight Donuts is Eugene’s fried-dough Shangri La on Hwy. 99. When I die, provided I’m good enough, I hope to go to someplace like Daynight. Some on-the-spot math revealed they offer more than 90 different varieties. That’s nearly double what I counted at downtown Eugene’s own Portland-born tourist trap Voodoo Doughnut, whose schtick is flamboyant selection.

I’m told Daynight’s most popular item is its chocolate apple fritter, which is so potent it deadens the tongue’s every taste bud for a short while.

I studied the blank expression on EW staff writer Rick Levin’s face as he chewed a chocolate coconut doughnut after nibbling the corner of Daynight’s notorious fritter.

“I’d call this cardboard excelsior,” he said, powerless to sense anything but fading fritter aftershocks.

Levin looked out the window across 99 at the godforsaken commercial landscape and said, “If you were trying to kill the human spirit, you couldn’t do a better job.”

I realized at that moment the view from Bob’s is the same. So are the vistas at Lee’s Donut and Master Donut in Springfield. Industro-commercial real estate and empty parking lots surround Dizzy Dean’s as well.

Peer long enough into the abyss and the abyss peers back into you, Nietzsche said.

The haunting words of a long-dead syphilitic kraut became suddenly crystal clear to me by way of a small town doughnut odyssey.

With nothing handy to grab hold of, the mind unwinds. Too much psychological spinout might lead to irreversible madness, but a little feels good. And may even be good for you.

If doughnut boutiques win and places like Blue Star wrest the doughnut from its rightful place in America’s dismal strip malls, more will be lost than can be counted in numbers. Cosmically minded city slickers will find themselves with one less venue from which to stare freely into the great emptiness.

CONNECTING MIDDLE EASTERN CULTURE THROUGH FOOD

BY DAEMON LEE

RESTAURANT OWNER ALAA ALBAADANI

What you know about Middle Eastern food is probably wrong — at least according to Alaa Albaadani. That's why she started the Mediterranean Network Restaurant, to share the traditional tastes from her home in Yemen, along with other staples from across the region.

"I love American food, but every restaurant that is not American is Americanized," Albaadani says. "I go to a Middle Eastern restaurant and it tastes totally different than what I'm used to. I get frustrated because people say, 'This tastes good,' and I say: 'That's not my food; that's not the real thing.'"

The difference, she says, is in the spices. The opening of her restaurant was delayed, in fact, by an extended search for the right spices. Some are more familiar, like cumin and cardamom. Others are more exotic, like saffron, the stigma of the saffron crocus, which gives food a cheerful yellow-red color. Za'atar features heavily in the menu as well, a traditional blend of spices used throughout the Middle East. Even the rice comes well seasoned, carrying a distinctive kick because of the addition of dried lemon.

One of her most popular dishes, Albaadani says, is the fattah lamb, a stew served in a bowl lined with chunks of saj, a flat bread flavored with habbah sauda seeds — sometimes called black caraway or nigella in English. The mendi chicken and mendi lamb are also popular. For vegetarians, one option is molokia, a green stew made from the leaf of the jute plant and a national dish in Egypt. Served over rice, molokia has a rich, garlicky taste and a distinctive slippery texture.

Her interest in cooking started out as a hobby, Albaadani says, something to do when she was bored. "I used to open up the fridge and get whatever ingredients I had and just start making food," she says. "Then I started learning more and more and I started getting recipes from my family and trying to add things to it, changing things and giving more flavor to it. That's how it started." She adds, "And people started loving it."

Albaadani lived in Eugene for six years before opening the restaurant, initially coming to study at Lane Community College and later the University of Oregon. She quickly earned a reputation as an adept preparer of comfort food for homesick Middle Eastern international students. When an American friend told her he would happily pay $20 for a plate of her food, an idea took root, although her lunch and dinner prices currently range from $10 to $16.

Albaadani says many of the recipes come from her mother, who is known to stop by now and then to see how things are going. But the details of those recipes are closely guarded. Sometimes a customer inquires about a recipe, but Albaadani's mother conveniently dodges the question with the classic line: "I can't tell you that; that's a family secret."

Aside from top-secret recipes, Albaadani says her vision for the restaurant is about sharing Middle Eastern food with people who may not have had the real thing. That's the rationale behind the name, particularly the "network" part. "It's connecting," Albaadani says, "connecting the American culture with my culture and the Middle Eastern culture, through the food."

Albaadani and her mother redecorated the 18th and Willamette location with blue and gold accents, complete with antique lamps from Turkey. Middle Eastern-style music plays quietly in the background. They currently serve breakfast, as well as lunch and dinner, offering an opportunity to try Middle Eastern breakfast standards like labneh, a yogurt cheese, or motabq, bread filled with eggs, tomatoes and green onions.

Albaadani acknowledges that appreciation for un-Americanized Middle Eastern food may come as a challenge for some. "But others come here and say, 'Thank you for doing this. It really does taste like home cooking.'"

Mediterranean Network Restaurant is at 1810 Willamette Street and is open every day from 10 am to 3 pm and 5 to 10 pm except for Tuesdays, when the restaurant is only open 5 to 10 pm. Find the restaurant on Facebook for more.

A TWIST ON SUMMER STANDBYS

Forget the typical raw tomatoes, sliced peaches or grilled corn on the cob. Not that there's anything wrong with those summer snacks, but typical is not part of the vocabulary of Tiffany Norton, Party Downtown's chef and owner (along with her husband, Mark Kosmicki). Her twists on the preparation of these summer standbys add a new level of taste that can be enjoyed in many different ways.

If you like sauerkraut, chances are you'll like sour corn. Unlike cabbage, which releases water when mixed with salt to create its own brine for fermentation, sour corn must be tossed with a salt-water solution to get it going. Add your corn kernels to your fermenting vessel and pour about a quart of water with about 2 tablespoons of salt over it. Let it sit out until you like the flavor of it. Serve it as a relish.

Another thing Norton is fond of doing with the abundance of Roma or other small summer tomatoes is roasting them. "Halve them and drizzle them with sea salt and olive oil and put them into a 300-degree oven for an hour and a half or so, so they're half-dried," Norton says. "It concentrates their flavor. You can put them in olive oil in the fridge or use them right away. Put them in grain salads or a charcuterie plate or with cheese." Party Downtown is serving oven-dried tomatoes as a garnish along with feta on a rabbit kofta dish with cremini mushrooms.

Think savory rather than sweet if you have stone fruit and you'll level up flavor and uses. Turn peaches or nectarines into a chutney by chopping them up with garlic and vinegar, mustard seeds, fenugreek and sugar. "Simmer until it becomes kind of cohesive," Norton says. "You can puree it and put it on things or leave it chunky." This savory sauce makes an appearance on a pork belly vindaloo special, served with olive oil fried toast and pickled onion rings. — Vanessa Salvia

CHANGE UP PESTO WITH AMARANTH

Scott Whitus, a chef formerly with Café Zenon, is recently back from working at McCarthy Lodge in Alaska. He is now managing the kitchen at Belly. He uses amaranth greens when they're in season in place of basil in pesto, which was recently featured as a highlight on a special dish of duck confit with chanterelle ravioli. Whitus has used sprouted amaranth microgreens, and this year has enjoyed seeing amaranth at The Kiva and Urban Redneck Farm. Amaranth will be back in season next year, but if you happen to see any around town, make sure to grab some of the herb.

"It's a vibrant red, purple, burgundy color and it makes your pesto that color," he says. "Pesto is a dish that everybody knows but with this it looks unique." Taste-wise, it's slightly earthier than basil and can be used cup for cup in place of the herb. Whitus uses a combination of amaranth, garlic, pine nuts, lemon juice, balsamic vinegar, olive oil, salt and pepper. "People have been loving it and it's really unique to get that delicious flavor with a different color."

TOSS UP YOUR TOMATOES

Now's the time of year when gardeners have more tomatoes than they know what to do with. It's a delicious problem. Take a page from Marché's recipe book and make a Moroccan-spiced tomato jam. Chef Karl Zenk makes a tomato jam with onion, garlic, ginger, cinnamon, black pepper, saffron and a little honey. No need to seed the tomatoes first, especially if you use a sauce-type. Cook it all down and add a little tomato paste if it's not quite thick enough. Freeze or can to have all winter long. Marché is using the tomato jam alongside socca, crepes made with a chickpea batter, filled with summer squash and Moroccan spices. — Vanessa Salvia

APPLES ALL DAY

Annette Pershern of RiverBend Farm & Pleasant Hill Orchard (river-bend-farm.com) works throughout the week, then spends her Saturdays in the farm's kitchen making pies, jams, handpies and pasties for the farmstand and the Dexter Lake Farmers Market.

When the produce starts to kick in, Pershern schedules twice-monthly jam-making classes using the fruit on their 50-acre family farm. "We usually have about eight people in each class," she says. "I love to share knowledge and I love what I do."

Pershern's parents bought the acreage in 1992. Her brother, niece, nephew and her two daughters are helping manage things. "It really is a family venture," she says.

The farm grows hazelnuts, more than 25 varieties of apples, several varieties of pears, peaches and several different types of cane berries along with vegetables such as zucchini, cucumbers and more. They are working on making hard cider from their apples and getting a license to allow for tastings.

Starting in September, a plethora of apples will be available for juicing, pies, sauces or just for eating out of hand. Gravenstein apples, says Pershern, make a "phenomenal" pie and will be ready for picking by mid-August. Pershern likes her pies on the tart side, and recommends a mix of Braeburn and Jonagold apples. "Jonagold makes a sauce that you don't even need to add sugar to," she says.

Come September, Empire apples will be available. An excellent eating apple that is juicy, crunchy and sweet, it's a cross between McIntosh and Red Delicious that can be stored for months. Melrose is also excellent for baking and a good keeper, she says. Braeburn and Fuji get picked late in the season and store well when kept chilled. Liberty is what Pershern recommends as the classic "backyard tree."

"They're disease-resistant and a smaller size, so kids eat the whole apple," she says.

All of these and other varieties of apples will be available for purchase from the farm, either as fresh apples, juice, cider or prepared products such as pies, jams, jellies and butters. — Vanessa Salvia

EAT YOUR FLOWERS

Eric Garcia, head chef at Rain Northwest, says he runs a high-utilization kitchen. “We try to always use what’s left for something else so nothing goes into the trash,” he says. “It’s not only good for the business because that helps us save money but it makes less trash.”

The restaurant’s goal is to eventually be self-sustainable by growing its own produce either on-site or in a farm outlet. As of now, the restaurant is doing some of that, but since the farm-to-table restaurant has only been open a few months, it’s just getting started.

Garcia utilizes some molecular techniques to change the taste or texture of the food. He also uses edible flower blossoms such as nasturtiums, borage and calendula. “People think that flowers on a plate are mainly for garnish and that you can slide it off the plate, but it is really part of the plate,” Garcia says.

Bright orange and yellow nasturtiums add a spicy note. The leaves, Garcia says, are also spicy but taste more plant-like, making them good for salads. Calendula has “a little spicy note,” but Garcia considers them more of the bitter end, again, good with mixed greens. “And borage is floral all around,” he says. “We put flowers on almost every plate we have.” — Vanessa Salvia
